

Aerial view of Feriton Spur Park showcasing its linear design, integration with the Cross Kirkland Corridor, and seamless adjacency to a corporate 6th Street campus — a model of urban connectivity and community-centered green space.

The "Kalakala in Flight" sculpture anchors the amphitheater with salvaged elements from the historic Kalakala ferry, transforming maritime history into a striking piece of public art and placemaking.

The interactive splash pad, one of several family-friendly amenities, promotes wellness, play, and year-round enjoyment at Feriton Spur Park.

The Feriton Spur Park includes a locally-run garden, which grows fresh produce for local foodbank— connecting community, sustainability, and food justice in the heart of the park.

A quiet bench nestled in lush native plantings offers a peaceful spot for rest and reflection, highlighting the park's commitment to health, resilience and ecological beauty.

A restored railcar sits at the heart of the park, now home to café and taproom that blends local history with vibrant community use.

The historic depot building anchors the park's railway heritage, with the adjacent trail inviting walkers, runners, and cyclists to connect with Kirkland's past and present along the Cross Kirkland Corridor.

An interpretive marker crafted from a repurposed timber and detailed with a custom brass relief shares the story of the site's industrial past, blending tactile materials with thoughtful storytelling.

Artifacts invite hands-on exploration of the site's railway heritage — with the taproom providing a lively backdrop of community and connection.

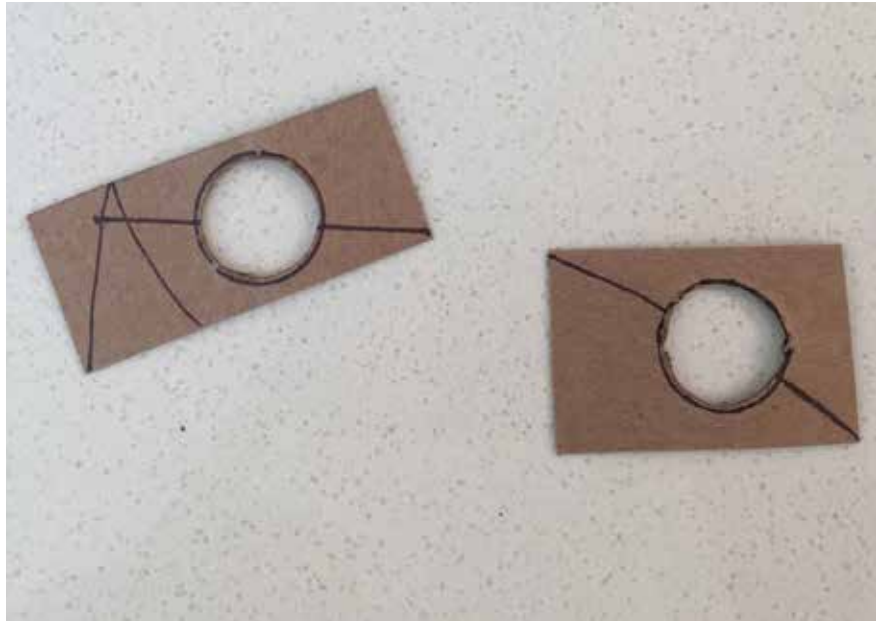

The Cross Kirkland Corridor trail runs through the heart of Feriton Spur Park, flanked by the lively spray pad and the taproom — a dynamic intersection of recreation, refreshment, and community.

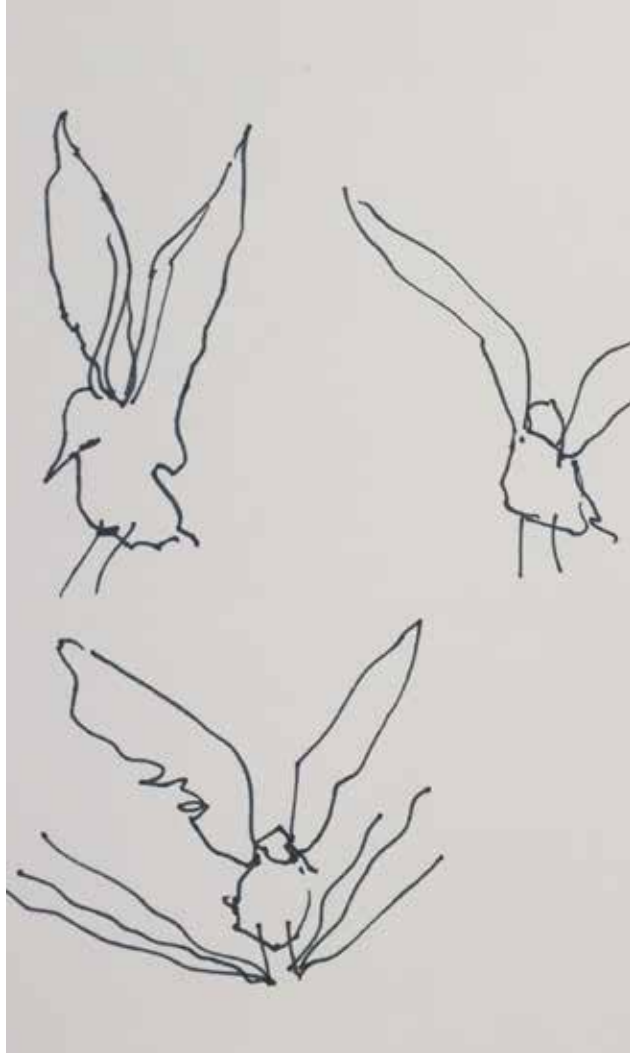

CONCEPT SKETCHES & MAQUETTE – KALAKA AS FLYING BIRD TRANSFORMATION TO SCULPTURE

1. Existing Bowpiece & Panel

2. Proposed Panel Cut Lines

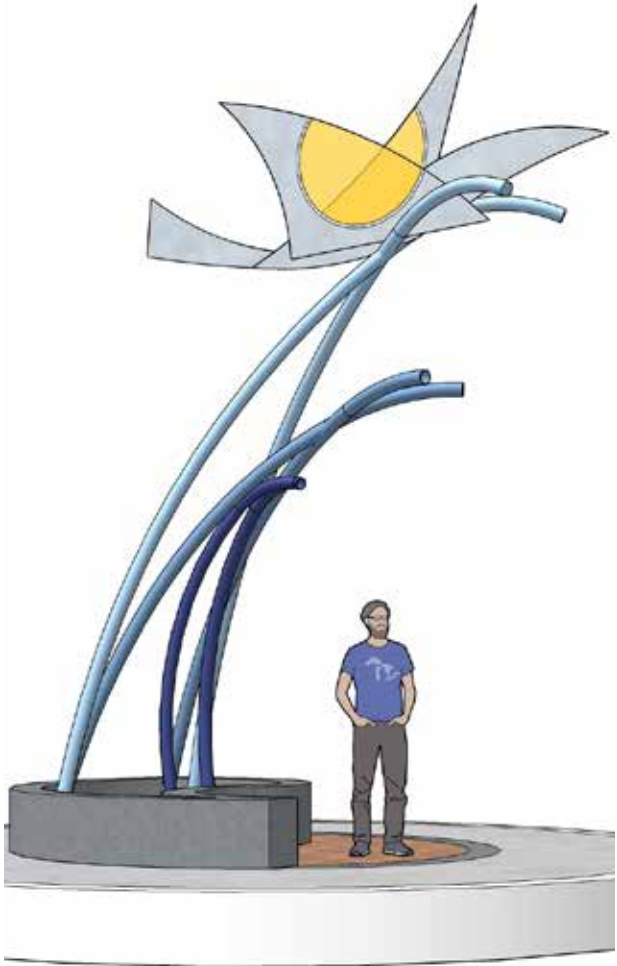

Seabirds in flight

3. Assembled Bird Form

4. Stantions as Wake Lines

Sculpture Model

Early cardboard maquette of “Kalakala in Flight” illustrate the design team’s hands-on process for transforming salvaged ferry parts into a sculptural centerpiece that honors the ferry’s legacy.

As evening settles in, the taproom glows with activity — a welcoming hub where history, hospitality, and community come together at the heart of Feriton Spur Park.